In this comprehensive series, we'll cover all 50 states, providing detailed information on each state's public campgrounds. We'll include insider tips, campground descriptions, and essential amenities information to help you make informed decisions about where to camp.

So sit back, relax, and start planning your next camping trip. With our guide, you'll be sure to find the perfect campground for your needs.

What to Look for in a Public Campground

When choosing a public campground, there are a few things you'll want to keep in mind:

- Location: Where do you want to camp? Are you looking for a campground that's close to a particular city or attraction? Or do you want to get away from it all and camp in a more remote location?
- Amenities: What amenities are important to you? Do you need a campground with hookups for your RV? Or are you looking for a more primitive campground with no amenities?
- Cost: How much are you willing to pay for a campsite? Campsite fees vary depending on the campground and the amenities offered.
- Availability: When do you want to camp? Some campgrounds are only open during certain seasons. And some campgrounds require reservations, especially during peak season.

Finding a Public Campground

Once you know what you're looking for, finding a public campground is easy. You can use the National Recreation Reservation Service (NRRS) website to search for campgrounds in all 50 states. You can also find campgrounds by visiting the websites of individual state park systems.

Tips for Camping in Public Campgrounds

Here are a few tips to help you make the most of your camping experience in public campgrounds:

- Arrive early to get the best campsite. Campgrounds are usually first-come, first-served. So if you want to get a good campsite, arrive early in the day.
- Follow the campground rules. Each campground has its own rules and regulations. Make sure to follow them to avoid getting a ticket or being asked to leave.
- Be respectful of other campers. Keep your noise level down and don't litter.
- Leave your campsite cleaner than you found it. Pack up all of your trash and belongings before you leave.
